Abstract

From Financialisation of the Economy to the Socialisation of Finance

This presentation starts by explaining the profound change in the sphere of production and capital accumulation which has paved the way for what has become to be known as "financialisation". This change allowed finance to rise to prominence within the economy by capturing and colonising not only economic processes of the individuals and firms but also their day to day existence. Technology and innovation applied to the sphere of finance facilitated these developments. In this presentation it is argued that the whole economic processes appeared to evolve around financial arrangements rather than the fundamentals of the real economy. The sphere of finance increasingly claimed its independence from economic fundamentals and operated within an autonomous space creating property price bubbles throughout the world. A new era began to reform and domesticate ongoing finance-mania. The presentation argues these points by particularly focusing on the regulatory challenges faced in the current crisis. In this regard Basel I and Basel II is scrutinized critically.

Key words: Financialisation, globalisation, capital accumulation, technological innovation, risk management, de-financialisation and socialization, Basel 2, Regulation.
